these two sermons address the concept of sadness particularly in the context of death and distinguishes between two types godly sorrow that leads to repentance and worldly sorrow that brings death it reflects on the inevitability of death as a divine decree and reassures believers of the hope of resurrection through christ the text cites biblical examples including king david s response to his son s death to illustrate appropriate mourning and the importance of maintaining faith it concludes by affirming the transformative power of resurrection urging christians to embrace hope rather than despair the english term prayer is usually understood as communication with god or the gods scholars of jewish ritual until now have accepted this characterization and applied it to jewish tefillah does rabbinic prayer indeed necessarily entail second person address to god as many scholars of rabbinic prayer to this point have presumed in this work yehuda septimus investigates a boundary phenomenon of talmudic prayer ritual speech with addressees other than god the book represents a fresh look at the possible range of performances undertaken by talmudic ritual prayer moreover it places that range of performances into the historical context of the rapid emergence of prayer as the centerpiece of jewish worship in the first half of the first millennium ce
